Letter from Culpeper. [Correspondence Alexandria Gazette.]

MITCHELL'S, Va., Aug. 30, '93.-We had a fearful wind and rain storm here from five to eleven, p. m., Monday the 28th inst.; trees and fencing were leveled and the corn crop laid flat to the earth.

The rain, however, was a great blessing to this whole section of country. Ashby Robertson, of this county, and his cousin from the western part of the State, left Culpeper on the 7 o'clock, p. m. passenger train Monday for this station. When within about a mile of the depot Mr. Robertson left his seat and opening the front car door passed out and it is supposed fell from the train, as his lifeless body was found ly-ing near the track the following morning by the section hands as they were going out to work. They carried him back to the station on a hand-car and the agent notified the coroner. A jury of inquest found his skull fractured and neck broken and were of the opinion that he fell from the car platform. Mr. Robertson at one time was a marine and was aboard of one of our ships that was wrecked in a burricane a few years ago at Samoa and received such injuries therefrom that he was honorably discharged from the service; his injuries, believed to be of a permanant nature, he was granted a pension of $18 per month. The pension was issued owing to heart trouble and the theory is that as there was a storm raging at the time and the atmosphere of the car being oppressive he started for the platform to get fresh air and being overcome he was thrown from the train. He was about 30 years of age and leaves a widow and young child.

He was very popular and a general favorite any and everywhere.

THISTLE. STONEWALL JACKSON'S DEATHBED,-

Then came the death wound, and after nearly a week's unavoidable detention | Goods. Mrs. Jackson reached her husband's deathbed, writes Mrs. Jefferson Davis in an interesting sketch with portrait of "The Widow of Stonewall Jackson" in the September Ladies' Home Journal. Spent with the anguish of his wounds he lay dying, too near the silence of the grave to do more than murmur to his wife: "Speaker louder, I want to hear all you say," and feebly to caress his baby with a whispered: "My sweet one, my treasure," while the innocent smiled in his dying face. Then was the heartbroken wife and mother given strength to minister to both these objects of her love. From her lips the dying hero learned that the gates of heaven were ajar for his entrance. Controlling her bitter grief she sang for him the sacred songs on which his faint-Extracting, 25c With gas or zono, 50c Cleaning, St. Of Cl ple, to live only for her baby. In strict retirement the young widow husbanded her means until her daughter was grown a pretty, graceful young woman, and then, to promote her child's happiness, the mother emerged from the vacy in which she had lived since her husband's death, and visited both the southern and northern States. In the course of time her daughter became eng ged to a young Virginian, Mr. Christian, of Richmond, and a few months later was married to him. Shortly after their marriage Mr. and Christian removed to California, whither Mrs. Jackson accompanied them. They returned a short time later to Charlotte, N. C., where they took a house and lived together. Now, however, the widow's next trial was imminent. Mrs. Christian was attacked by a prostrating fever and succumb-
